In the heat of problem-solving, you and your team of developers and administrators need quick solutions to tactical problems. Yet there's no time for sifting through articles, running to the bookstore, or waiting for overnight shipments. And Web searches can yield irrelevant and inaccurate information.

But now, with Safari Tech Books Online, you can have a complete IT and programming e-reference library right on the desktop. It's packed with thousands of titles from today's top technology publishers, and designed so you can zero in on exactly the information you need.

With Safari, you can work in a whole new way:

- Go directly to the source, accessing the most respected experts, authors, and developers on the hottest tech topics, even before some books hit the shelves.
- Search across thousands of books and related sources in the library simultaneously.
- Pinpoint the exact chapter, sentence, or example you need.
- Download chapters to view offline in PDF format.
- Cut and paste code directly, saving time and eliminating programming errors.

The Safari database contains the full content of thousands of leading tech books—a depth and breadth of content that no other e-reference resource comes close to matching. You simply type in a phrase in the search box, click, and instantly see a complete list of books and sections ranked by relevance. When you click on a section, you can immediately read the text you need. You can then download, copy, paste, e-mail, annotate, or bookmark any material for future reference. It doesn't get any easier than that.
